"The idea was developed at a tent hospital, established by Dr. William A. Brooks, medical director of the Shipping Board's training service, on a high hill in Brookline, a Boston suburb. The tents have been replaced by specially built shacks, in which ventilation can be controlled and a maximum of sunshine secured. "In each shack one-half the roof can be tilted back, opening the whole room to the sun and air. One side of the room is a glass sash that can be opened out completely. The walls of the room do not reach to the roof, is leaving about a foot clearance for air space.

Optimism prevailed among war loan officials. Some sections were lagging, but for a majority of the nation it can be said there is no shirking, according to reports. Acceptance of the Fourth and greatest Liberty loan as a part of the "regular routine in war time" means much, officials believe. They expect a steady consistant canvassing of investors with no loss of time.
